Psychologist

Human beings are more interested in love than in anything else. Most pop songs are about love. But what exactly happens when people fall in love? Well, scientists have been studying the phenomenon of love and it seems that love is a less romantic business than we thought.

Take a man who walks into a room. Let's call him Romeo. The first stage of falling in love is when he sees a woman. We'll call her Juliet. Why does Romeo find Juliet more attractive than all the other women in the room? First of all, he likes the size and shape of her face. Juliet also likes the size and shape of Romeo's face; she likes his straight figure and the fact that his face isn't too masculine. Research has shown that women are more likely to be attracted to the soft features of Leo Di Caprio than the square face of someone like Schwarzenegger.

As Romeo gets closer, his heart beats faster. He blushes slightly, he sweats a little and his hair begins to shine more brightly. This is because his head produces a kind of oil that makes his hair look brighter. He is already in the first stages of love.

For love to develop, both the man and the woman must have similar feelings. Romeo thinks that Juliet is the most important person in the world and she feels the same way about him.

The next day, Romeo has reached the second stage of falling in love: his brain releases a substance called dopamine every time he thinks of Juliet, and this makes him feel good. But he doesn't know that what he's feeling is the effect of the dopamine; he thinks he's falling in love.

He feels more and more attracted to Juliet. She is continually in his thoughts and he can't get her out of his mind – not that he really wants to, because even the thought of her makes him feel good.

One Saturday, Romeo and Juliet go out shopping and they reach the third stage of falling in love. By now they are head over the heels in love with each other. They are so crazy about each other that they become blind to each other's faults. No one in the world is more perfect than their partner.

Then they enter the fourth stage of love – the make or break stage. If their bodies are not producing the right chemicals, their love may fade. What might keep them together are substances called endorphins.

Endorphins calm the mind and reduce anxiety, though the feelings they produce are not as powerful as the feelings Romeo and Juliet experienced when they first started to go out together. But now they feel warm and safe. They have become dependent on each other – they say they can't live without each other. It's true love at last.

Контрольная работа по чтению.

The importance of writing

1. Writing helps to remember things. If the matter you read or hear is important you have to make a note of it.
2. By writing alone we can transmit information from one generation to another.
3. If you do scientific research you have to read what have been written on the matter before.
4. After the discovery of how to make fire and after the gradual development of speech by which men might exchange their thought and ideas, the most important factor in human history was the invention and perfection of means by which speech might be recorded – writing and, later, printing.
5. It meant that a man could communicate with those with whom he could not speak – either because they were far away or because they were not yet born. It meant that each generation could hand on something of what it had learned; that each generation started a little further ahead, that gradually we accumulated knowledge and power. It meant that a man did not need to rely only on what any one can remember and understand. Before writing came no one could know more than himself and his neighbours were able to learn and remember. It could only be a very small part of the sum total of knowledge. When writing was invented, when manuscripts and books appeared; it became possible to find out things by reading.
6. That our present day civilization owes its existence to the written word and the printed page is quite clear to everybody.

7. If tomorrow we all forget how to read, we shall revert to the conditions of the Dark Ages.

Books from only a small part of the total output of printed matter. Millions of different items for conveying or recording information are circulated every year – catalogues, programmes, newspapers, periodicals, maps, calendars, the reports and proceedings of thousands of institutions and organizations. Yet books are the most substantial, the most permanent and in some ways the most important of printed publications.

How many books there are in the world is impossible to say. Their number is growing from year to year.

Production and cost production is the conversion of inputs into outputs. It is an economic process that uses inputs to create a commodity for exchange or direct use. Production is a flow and thus a rate of output per period of time. Distinctions include such production alternatives as for consumption (food, haircuts, etc.) vs. investment goods (new tractors, buildings, roads, etc.), public goods (national defense, small-pox vaccinations, etc.) or private goods (new computers, bananas, etc.), and "guns" vs. "butter". Opportunity cost refers to the economic cost of production: the value of the next best opportunity foregone. Choices must be made between desirable yet mutually exclusive actions. It has been described as expressing "the basic relationship between scarcity and choice." The opportunity cost of an activity is an element in ensuring that scarce resources are used efficiently, such that the cost is weighed against the value of that activity in deciding on more or less of it. Opportunity costs are not restricted to monetary or financial costs but could be measured by the real cost of output forgone, leisure, or anything else that provides the alternative benefit (utility). Inputs used in the production process include such primary factors of production as labour services, capital (durable produced goods used in production, such as an existing factory), and land (including natural resources). Other inputs may include intermediate good used in production of final goods, such as the steel in a new car. Economic efficiency describes how well a system generates desired output with a given set of inputs and available technology. Efficiency is improved if more output is generated without changing inputs, or in other words, the amount of "waste" is reduced. A widely-accepted general standard is Pareto efficiency, which is reached when no further change can make someone better off without making someone else worse off. Much applied economics in public policy is concerned with determining how the efficiency of an economy can be improved. Recognizing the reality of scarcity and then figuring out how to organize society for the most efficient use of resources has been described as the "essence of economics," where the subject "makes its unique contribution."

Text 2

Public relations (PR) is the actions of a corporation, store, government, individual, etc., in promoting goodwill between itself and the public, the community, employees, customers, etc. An earlier definition of public relations, by The first World Assembly of Public Relations Associations, held in Mexico City, in August 1978, was "the art and social science of analyzing trends, predicting their consequences, counseling organizational leaders, and implementing planned programs of action, which will serve both the organization and the public interest." Others define it as the practice of managing communication between an organization and its publics. The European view of public relations notes that besides a relational form of interactivity there is also a reflective paradigm that is concerned with publics and the public sphere; not only with relational, which can in principle be private, but also with public consequences of organizational behaviour. A much broader view of interactive communication using the Internet, as outlined by Phillips and Young in Online Public Relations Second Edition (2009), describes the form and nature of Internet-mediated public relations. It encompasses social media and other channels for communication and many platforms for communication such as personal computers (PCs), mobile phones and video game consoles with Internet access. The increasing use of the mentioned technologies give the media a democratisation power and thus, aid to the demystification of subjects. Public relations is used to build rapport with employees, customers, investors, voters, or the general public. Almost any organization that has a stake in how it is portrayed in the public arena employs some level of public relations. There are a number of public relations disciplines falling under the banner of corporate communications, such as analyst relations, media relations, investor relations, internal communications and labor relations. Most of them include the aspect of peer review to get liability
